Classification Schema

- Public t_class_1
- Internal Use Only t_class_2
- Restricted Use t_class_3
- Sensitive Confidential t_class_4

Safe Recipient domain: acme.com. All others untrusted above public.

Ecosystem;

- SIEM – Securonix
- Firewall – Palo Alto
- CASB – None
- DLP – Forcepoint
- Email Encryption - Cisco Ironport
- IRM - None

Insider information: financial information or projections, news of pending mergers or acquisitions, significant new product announcements or technological developments)

Per Code of conduct doc:

WE PROTECT OUR INFORMATION AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

Acme's proprietary and confidential information.

Information that should be protected includes:

- Restricted and Internal Proprietary Information (ProtectLevel1) developed or acquired by Acme (and not freely available to others) must be protected against theft, loss, or inadvertent public disclosure. Because these limitations on disclosure apply even after association with Acme ends, upon separation from Acme for any reason, you must return any material containing proprietary information and must refrain from disclosing any such protected information.
- Restricted and Sensitive Customer and Employee Information (ProtectLevel2) gathered from either customers or from employees will be collected accurately and appropriately safeguarded, whether those records are held by Acme or a Acme business partner. Access to such information is limited to those who have a legitimate business need for it.
- Intellectual Property, (ProtectLevel3) such as trademarks or copyrights, is used only as properly authorized. Acme's corporate identity, logo, trademarks, and service marks are valuable business assets that represent Acme's good will and reputation. Acme's rights may be destroyed or diluted by improper use of the trademarks or service marks.
- Privileged Information (ProtectLevel4) recognizes an attorney-client privilege that shields certain confidential communications between its attorneys and its employees. To protect this privilege, communications to and from Acme's attorneys, work done under the direction of an attorney, and any information designated as privileged, must not be disclosed to others unless authorized by the Legal Department.

Restricted

WE MANAGE OUR RECORDS AND INFORMATION To safeguard company records, you must retain, store, and discard information relating to Acme's business according to our Records and Information Management Policy, which can be found on the General Policies Page of the Company's intranet. You should periodically review paper documents, computer files, electronic mail, and other files, then discard information and records not under a legal hold in accordance with Acme's record retention schedules and policy. The Legal Department will issue a Legal Hold Notice when the Company receives or becomes aware of a legal claim. Custodians with responsive information will receive these Legal Hold Notices. If you receive a Legal Hold Notice, you must locate, preserve, and protect from modification or destruction any information in your possession, custody, or control that the Notice identifies. A Acme lawyer or paralegal will collect this information later. If you have questions regarding what must be preserved or collected, call the Acme Legal Department attorney who issued the Legal Hold Notice.A Legal Hold Notice trumps all normal retention periods set forth in the Company's Retention Schedules, and any information "on hold" must be preserved until the Legal Department releases the Legal Hold. Note that some information may be subject to Legal Holds for multiple, unrelated claims. If it is not and the Legal Hold is released, the information that was previously "on hold" should then be returned to its prior retention period as defined in the Retention Schedule